To Mr. John D. McKinley

His deep concern for our welfare, his unfailing willingness to help us, and his extraordinary teaching ability have helped to make our days at Classical pleasant ones. More than a teacher, always a friend, he has served us unselfishly and zealously. With sincere gratitude and with profound respect, therefore, we dedicate to him

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS

DONALD GRANT

We are pleased, this afternoon, to welcome our parents, our teachers and our friends to these, our 1960 Class Day exercises. We hope that you will enjoy our ceremonies.

Shortly we shall be departing from these familiar halls, in which, for the past three years, we have devoted our time and our efforts to studies, to sports and to many other activities. We have enjoyed these experiences and we are sad to realize their end. Through these happy fruitful years we have glided contentedly, not willing to acknowledge their shortness.

We are now awakened by our impending departure. Within the next few days we shall take our leave of many teachers and students. We shall, however, take with us a grateful realization of the excellent preparation afforded us by our fine, understanding faculty. Our parents should feel some pride for having guided us so lovingly through these important years. We now know that the time is at hand for the practical application of our knowledge. Whether we venture immediately into the business world or enter colleges or professional schools, success shall now, more than ever, rest in our hands alone.

We ourselves look ahead with hope and with confidence. We wish our lives to justify the concern shown by our parents and our teachers. Along with a seriousness of purpose we have gained many memories which we shall cherish. Our class functions, the sports events, and the informal parties we shall recall with nostalgia. In time we shall number these among our happiest years.

Our lives see many partings such as these and we must accept them as inevitable but not final. Apart or together we shall all be bound by our common experience — tireless old Classical High School.

CLASS HISTORY

MARY E. SALMON

Looking back on our stay at Classical, I am reminded of a three-act play, with all of us comprising the cast and Mr. Couming as our able director.

It was September, 1957. The scene was the school auditorium. The stage was set, the lights were glaring, and our hearts were pounding. There we sat, a little nervous, feeling very much like strangers after the comfortable security we had enjoyed as competent performers at our former schools. The curtain was about to go up on a new way of life for us.

As we wandered through the halls those first few weeks, we wondered what the Juniors and Seniors could possibly be referring to by remarks like "They're getting smaller every year". As the football season approached they began to appreciate us more, especially when Jerry Kahn began to make those touchdowns. We were soon struggling with geometry theorems and gathering biology specimens. Many of us attended the football games and cheered with spirit when "Salatubie" scored. When the Argus was distributed at the end of November, we gazed with pride at our names and addresses in black and white, and felt that we had really arrived.

As sophomores we made bi-weekly treks to gym classes. It was on the floor of the YWCA that Carol LeBlanc and Ellie Lemay gave their most outstanding performances. We girls still cherish the memories of gym; from which we often emerged with straggly hair and aching muscles, to trudge back to school through rain, snow or sun. Our first social affair was the Variety Show, Around The World, in which Lewis Hahn first appeared. When our first term at Classical drew to a close, we greeted with condescension the new arrivals to our ranks, little realizing that among them were Phyllis Romanoff and Susan Singer, future graduation speakers. In March, Bobby Bachrach's exhibition on electroluminescence won first prize at the Classical Science Fair.

Spring came to our campus; Mr. McKinley sported a fresh pansy every day. We turned out in large numbers to view the Senior Play, The Barretts of Wimpole Street. When the "E" list was published, we learned that Harriet Glickman was the first one of us to have achieved a 5 - "E" rating.

Sue Cotton, Sue Lieberman, and Ruth Ann Casdin decided to lend their tennis skills to the Girls Tennis Team, while Carol Foley, Linda Bates, Gayle Wackell, Peggy Mitchell, and Carol Odabasian joined the cheerleaders.

Finally the last week of school was upon us. Much to our satisfaction we realized that we had survived the ordeal. When the applause died down, we found that we were ready for the second act.

As Juniors, we found Mr. Couming installed as our new principal and Mr. Cravedi as his assistant. The brisk fall of 1958 gave us determination to make our junior year memorable. Our first class elections made Dwayne Lehigh, president; Jane Mahoney, vice-president; Joanne Chafetz, secretary; and Tim Henrion, treasurer.

Beth Hutchins made us all a bit envious when she began to travel to Dartmouth for weekends. We were puzzled to find that Patti Sullivan's biology assignments included modelling in Elm Park.

A new name appeared in the Argus, as Tom Sneery kept us informed of the athletic activities of our classmates. Carol Tash was named captain of the Girls Veeblefetzer team and Judy Porter captained the Girls Knitting team. Harvey Boss, we read, received a solid gold Pepsi-Cola bottle when he bowled on television.

In January we attended the Variety Show, A Touch of Seasoning, and decided that Judy Fairbanks made an excellent mistress of ceremonies. To prove how versatile our talents were, George Lemay and Sandra Salman won gold keys in the Scholastic Art Awards.

In January, the Basketball team brought glory to Classical by defeating the arch-rival North in a thrilling game. Billy Attridge was an outstanding player on the team. On the feminine side, Jane "Hula-hoop" Casdin had become the sensation of the Girls Basketball Team.

Under the direction of Betsy Fulder and "Butch" Boucher, the Junior Prom Committee began to prepare for the prom. The dance, held at the Italian-American Club on March 6, was the highlight of our junior year. We were sorry to lose Betsy later in the year when she moved to California.

In April, the musical organizations presented their annual Spring Concert, to which many of us lent our talent. Dwayne Lehigh and Ernie Waxman shone as soloists. We bravely took the trial College Boards and National Merit Examination in May, and emerged dazed, praying for an increase in intelligence over the summer months. 1959 was the year for our tennis team, which proceeded to capture the Western Massachusetts championship. Dick Emmons was a semi-finalist in the competition. One rainy day in June, we held our junior picnic at Lincoln Woods in Rhode Island. All who attended were relieved when the weather cleared. I guess we know who made the biggest splash that day.

At graduation exercises the Harvard Book Prize was awarded to Richard Clarke and the Aletheia Award to Mary Coakley. The departure of one Senior left Rachel Feinsilver blue, but the rest of us were elated to realize that at last we could be called the "grand old Seniors".

That summer Martha Sawyer studied science at the Saint Mark's Summer School and Bobby Bachrach attended Thayer Academy, while Barbie Golden, Natalie Rubin and David Freeman toured the country.

To start the third act of our play with a bit of formality, we elected as senior officers Donald Grant, Penny Osborn, Sue Lindquist and Richie Silver. We applied to colleges and shared the anxiety of waiting to hear of acceptance or rejection. We dodged the class treasurer as each installment of dues was announced. We agonized together over Chemistry quizzes, and hopefully we underwent the College Boards.

Honor was heaped upon us when Margie Powell was named a finalist in the National Merit Scholarship Competition. Tobe Carey was our representative for Good Government Day in the state capital. In the Scholastic Art Awards, Ruth Ettine received a gold key, while Nancy Harney, Ginny Tsouros, Marilyn Isaacson, and Marion Perlman won honorable mention.

In January we presented the Senior Hop, "Beatnik Bengals", the "beat" for which was provided by Bill Sharfman's jazz "combo". After February vacation the tanned faces of Judy Ravelson and Larry Opert were in sharp contrast to the rest of us who had not been in Florida. Our Variety Show, Let There Be Music, drew as big a crowd as ever. Under the expert direction of Ronnie Hamburger, Emilie Roy, and Gayle Wackell, an outstanding show was produced. Can any of us ever forget the sight of the graceful football players in their powdered wigs and flowing skirts, dancing the minuet?

Spring brought the Senior Play, distribution of our photographs to our many admirers, baseball, and, of course, spring fever. With growing excitement, we began to prepare for the climax of our play.

And now, as we celebrate Class Day, the end is very close. We are beginning a week of festivities unequalled previously in our high school years. The joy and frivolity of the Senior Prom and the quiet dignity and grandeur of graduation will combine to form an overwhelming finale. When the curtain has gone down, our places will soon be filled by another Senior class, but we will take into the world of adulthood the satisfaction of a performance well done. We leave with one thing in mind, that we have traveled a road filled now with memories that will remain - - always in our hearts.

CLASS WILL -- 1960

LEWIS A. HAHN

Three memorable years are drawing to a close—years spent in the noble pursuit of knowledge, in attending various social functions, and in anxious periods of hopeful anticipation. As evidence of our deep gratitude and high esteem for Classical High, therefore:

We, the class of 1960, possessed of reasonably sound mind and comprehension, do collectively acknowledge this instrument to be our last will and testament.

To Mr. Couming and the faculty, we leave our sincerest appreciation for the wise counsel and constant support they have given us.

The ghosts of Hamlet and Macbeth are left to give added charm to the already archaic halls of Salatoubie.

To Miss Barsam, we leave a gas mask and some antibiotics.

To Miss Fitzpatrick, we leave Mary K. Jones.

To Mr. Erickson, we leave one of those electronic laugh producers.

To Mr. Powers, we leave a pair of soft white slippers, he must get awfully sore kicking himself with hard leather shoes.

Norm Sirk leaves two hundred grams of potato chips to the chemistry department.

Gail Wackell leaves her feet to some graceful junior.

"Woodsie" Kursman leaves his tongue in his mouth.

Bruce Bolton leaves, finally.

Ronnie Hamburger leaves a collection of his sweater to any sophomore who will go three months without a haircut.

Mary Nozzolillo leaves to Mr. Coakley a pictorial account of some of her driving experiences as a deterrent for accidents.

"Sig" Sugarman leaves his spikes, his helmet, and his personal parking spot at Friendly's.

Jimmie Kindley leaves his skin, I mean skins, while Bill Sharfman is swinging.

Marilyn Rozefsky leaves for that evening course at Tech.

A good portion of the senior class leaves Lano's and Drake's in shambles.

Fred Siff leaves his name, he doesn't want it.

Ellie Kaplan leaves her father.

Al Tapper leaves his golden-throated musical ability to the other remaining monotones in the glee club.

Casey Gedmintas leaves on a big stick to sell white shoe polish to sneaker-clad folk dancers.

Harv Boss leaves for Lowell, egg-Loll.

Sandy Milutis leaves a comb and four bobby-pins in the spaghetti.

Kenny Moses 1 - 1 - 1 - leaves.

Carol Tash leaves 4,382 gum wrappers to any sophomore with 4,382 pieces of unwrapped gum.

Richard Payne leaves screaming, "It's Richard, Richard, my father was Louis."

Emilie Roy leaves for Bermuda with the variety show money.

Steve Smith leaves a four point challenge to any junior.

Richie Emmons leaves to find a new racket.

Tobe Carey and Larry Cohen leave with their noses in books.

Tom Keating leaves on time, he was a little late in coming.

Steve Yerow leaves some of his teachers alone.

I leave chuckling over the censored material from this will.

And, finally, Carole A. Zuma leaves last.

This official document has been witnessed, signed, and everything is legal.

CLASS ORATION

We have just completed a long sleigh ride; our cheeks are not red from the lash of the wind, nor do our hands ache from the bitter cold weather. We have enjoyed the ride, but we have not as yet paid our transportation fare. After a trip of three years, we have at last reached our destination. My analogy is not difficult to understand: conducted by our parents and by our teachers, we have travelled through the realms of youth and of knowledge without being physically affected by the long and arduous route. Today, however, our journey ends, because we have reached our destination: graduation. For our trip, we must repay the drivers; but the question arises as to what the payment will be. Since money is useless, for none of us can decide how much three years of hard work are worth, we must pay with something far more valuable—with those traits of character which our parents and our teachers have helped us to develop—qualities such as courage, tolerance, and honesty.

As we enter the world of adulthood, we must enter with confidence. We should show those who have aided us that we are strong enough to overcome any obstacles that may arise. Because we have this obligation to perform, we should be aware of what part of ourselves we shall have to put into the various problems which will face us when we become adults. Let us, for the next few minutes, examine some of these problems.

We were born during a war unequalled for brutality in the annals of recorded history. Some of us had relatives who died amidst almost incredible horrors; some of us actually fled from those horrors. That we have had to know war from the beginning of our lives is unfortunate, and that we may always have to face the threat of war is just as depressing. If we are, therefore, to repay our parents and our teachers, we must defend freedom and give to the fight for freedom a precious part of our characters: courage.

Those of us who are going to college this fall are going primarily because we wish to prepare ourselves for careers in later life. College can, to be sure, equip us for various occupations; but it can also equip our characters in a much more valuable manner: it can teach us to be tolerant of other people. Thus far in our lives, we have been relatively free from the clutches of prejudice. Although we, as a whole, represent various backgrounds and religions, we have managed to appreciate and to understand the ways of life of each other. The only drawback, however, is that we have seen each other for a comparatively short amount of time; six hours a day is not nearly long enough. At college, we shall spend many hours of each day with strangers. If we are to derive as much as possible from the next four years, we must attempt to exercise tolerance at all times. We must pay for our journey with the mature outlook which we, as adults, must develop.

To discuss the corruption of modern times is not pleasant, but it is so prevalent in the world that it deserves mention in my discussion of our future problems. Dishonesty exists everywhere: in business, in government, and in private living. Each day brings with it new and terrible crimes; each day reveals shocking and great deceptions. Charles Van Doren, who has had to pay dearly for his dishonesty, recently wrote, "Choices and decisions are neither partly right nor partly wrong, because part of the people would make them one way, part the other." The temptation to participate in wrongdoing has often beckoned to us. The chance for committing acts of vandalism has faced us many times; the opportunity for cheating, however slightly, has frequently presented itself to us. If we have resisted these opportunities, we have done so as a result of the influence of those who have sincerely tried to instill in us the values of truth and of righteous living.

Our debt is not an easy one to repay, for it requires many virtues which are difficult to acquire and to practice. If we shirk the responsibility of paying this debt, we are leaving Classical under false pretenses. Thomas Carlyle, in speaking of the dissipations of youth, criticizes those who preach that young people must wallow in a "kind of mud-bath, in which the youth is, as it were, necessitated to steep and to cleanse himself, before the real toga of Manhood can be laid upon him." Carlyle does not think that youths have to sow wild oats before they assume the burdens of adulthood. He writes, "Sin and Remorse so easily beset us at all stages of life, and we are always such indifferent company, that it seems hard we should, at any stage, be forced and fated to meet them."

We see, therefore, that by refusing to acknowledge our debt, we shall reap a harvest of regret. The price of our journey is, I admit, a great one. Courage, tolerance, and honesty seem impossible to attain, when cowardice is near. Robert Burns, in one of his poems, tells us that "The honest man, tho' e'er sae poor, is king o'men." Let us endeavor to be honest to our convictions and to our responsibilities, even though we shall live in a world filled with violence and concerned with material wealth. The time has come for us to enter this forbidding success in all your endeavors.

The memories of our years at Classical should help to dispel our fears, and the knowledge that our parents and our teachers have faith in us should give us confidence, as we go down the road of life. While I look upon your faces, fellow graduates, I become certain that you will not fail to repay your debt in full by offering the only price worth paying: your success in all your endeavors.
